Gladetone Makes a Speech in the Heuse of Commons. The McCarrbyttes Satisfied with His Assurances LOSDON, Aug. 10. Gladstone still feeling the effects of his recent illness, had an occasional recourse to a mild stimulant during the delivery of yesterday's speech. He is now at Stuart country seat for a two days' rest. Bo h sides of the house admit the dexterity of his address, his neat phraseology suggesting much but promising little. The McCarthytes contains the destartion satisfactory, though promising little. The McCarthytes consider his declaration satisfactory, though undecided. The Parnellites are qualified, but will note with the Libers a Thursday. Their disgruntlement is chiefy due to the fact that the Liberal leaders withfield their confidence. Balfour's response to Gladatone is not considered a great effort. The Times considers Gladatone's fire and vocabulary automising for a man of his years. It calls his language grave and majosite, but a vague and uncertain. The Chronicle considers it a masterpiece of adroit illusiveness.

Captain John Dowdell, of Gloucester master of the fishing vessel Lucy Ann, met with a shocking and probably fatal seedent Saturday night, at Rockland. At about six o'clook, while the vessel was lying at anchor near the Chase fish wharf, Captain Dowdel appeared on deck. A few moments later he was seen to stagger to the rail, the movement being followed by a dull third, a splash and then silence Dowdel's dory mates rushed to the side, but seeing no trace of their captain low-ered a gaff in hope of raising the body Fully five misuites had been spent in this manner, and the men were at the point of deapair, when a weight was felt at the end of the book. The men pulled frantically and the inanimate form appeared on the surface, blood streaming from the right eye in which the hook had been deeply imbedded. The body was taken to the cablin where ordinary means of resustation were tried without avail. Marine Surgeon Adams had arrived in the meanwhile, and by his order the victim was removed to the Marine Hospital where every care is taken. At a late hour he showed slight signs of returning to life.

Yesterday was one of the most oppreslively warm days we have had this sesson. The thermometer did not indicate an exessively high temperature, it being about 10 in the sunde and 108 in the sun at the lottest time: but the heat was of that weltering nature that comes with dog day weather, and people perspired freely with very ittle exertion. It was so hot hat few people had the heart to ask anyme else if it was !'warm effough."

Einest White and James Austin, of North Brewer, were before the Municipal Court yesterday on the charge of drunkonness and, nighting. The manager of the Brower High School base ball nine has received a communication from the Bucksport team, in which that club proposes a game to occur on September 3rd or 10th. The matter of accepting the challenge is now under conaderation, and will be decided soon. The High School team has had but a few games this year, but can readily get into practice, and if a contest is arranged will andoubtedly make the same gratifying showing for themselves that they have in the past. Members of several of the committees that have d charge the arrangements in various departments for the coming Y. P. S. C. E. State Convention in Bangor, come from the societies in this city. Christian Endeavors here are looking forward to the event with much interest and will do all in their power to make it a success, spiritually and otherwise. A big convention is expected and the programme that has been arranged contains an array di pleasing features that cannot fail to make it one of the most enjoyable Use Only the Arcestock Condensed Hilk sessions ever held. The committees are working hard as the dates for the event

A moment more Brewster stood as though he would ask another question, then almostly turned and plunged into the darkness.

Meantime Major Kenyon had trudged up the row toward Holden's quarters.

Already the lights were beginning to gleam from the various houses around the big condrangle of the parade, where the big quadrangle of the parade, where a dosen of the cavalry officers were now busily emgaged in preparation for the sudden move. Over at the hospital, too, sudden move. Over at the hospital, too, the lamps were being lighted in the steward's room and the dispensary. Holden's hall door stood wide open. The hall itself was dark, but a lamp was alight in the sitting room, and that door, too, was wide open. A tall form passed across the illumined space as Kenyon drew bear. He atopped for a moment at the gate, listening to the sound of at the gate, listening to the sound of bustle, the whichling and singing of the men at the barracks. 'Hardship, hun-ger, privation, suffering sheed of them, even if they don't have hand fighting," he muttered to himself. "In thirty-six hours they'll be freezing, poor devils, for not a man in the battalic n has a win terkit and just hear them laugh and sing, as though the world had no joy like soldiering! God guard them—and these poor wives and aweethearts here. Why isn't it my lot to go instead of Berrien's? Who the devil would shed a tear for mel" He shook himself together and tramped heavily into the gate and up the steps.

"Dod!" he called at the doorway.
"Oh, Doc!"

No spewer. The house was silent. "Oh, Holden! Where are you?" Still no reply. "Old," said Zenyon; "I thought I saw him in here. Who could that have been?" With the confidence of army intimacy he tramped through the sitting room on the left of the hall, the sixting room on the left of the hall, then into the dining room beyond. No one there. Then across the hall again and into Holden's own a central room at the rear of the house. The kerosene lamp was burning on the dressing table. The bed had been occurred. Evidently Holden had turned in ear y, only to be routed out by the orders by the colonel. The floor creaked someware overhead. Then he was sure he neard a quick, light footfall on the stair. "Oh, Doc! Here I am. It's Kenyon, he cried. But no answer came. Once more re-burning to the hall, and thence to the sitting room, he found them empty as before. The parlor door on the west side was closed. Slowly be strolled out on the front piazza, just in time to catch sight of a tall form in the dark circular cape striding up to the gate. Surely that was Holden. Then he heard a "Hello, Rolfe. That you?"

"Yes. You go with us, do you?"
"I do. Won't you come ir?"

"Not just now; I've got to go to my starters a moment. Ill be in by and by. We'll have to make a n ght of it." "All right. Kathleen will get us some coffee after a while. Bring in some of the others with you." Then the dottor came bumding up the steps. "Hello, Kenyon. You here? Well, you were right after all, weren't you? I've just been over to the hospital to see to the field chests."

Weren't you in here just now?" asked Kenyon. "I' No! Not for ten minutes."

Kenyon.

"I? No! Not for ten minutes."

"Well, some one was here—up stains and down, both. I called tw ce and got no answer, but I saw a man and heard the stips. Thought it was you."

"Rolle, perhapel. He was n the road just beyond our gate as I came back, but I thought he had just come from his company insertes."

"Queer!" said Holden, his thoughts in stantly reverting to the event of the week before. "Did you see him?" , "llasw a figure pass across the light streaming from the sitting noom door. Then heard the step up stairs while I stood in your room, and then very quick, light steps on the stairs—some one coming down like a streak, now that I think of it."

"How long age?"
"Not more than a minute hefore you got here,"

"By Jove, I'm going to look into this?"
said Folden quickly. "Of course you've heard of the excitement we had here.
Bring that candle, will you? I'll take the lamp." Up the stairs they went—up to the landing where Nita Guthrie had her materiors. Tight her mysterious fright and fall. The door of the room are occupied was open. All was darkness within. Holden, followed by Kenyon, entered, and they set their lights upon a table. The side win-dow was shut and barred, the south windown as firmly closed. Everything looked neat and undisturbed, but cold and deserted. No sign of an intruder for a mement to the eyes of either man. Then of a sudden Holden made a spring for the teller table, seized a small silver frame and stood graving at it.
"By Jove! look here!"

"Whip's the matter" asked Xenyon.
"Don't you see?" was the answer, as the doctor held the face of the frame toward him, empty and gaping. "Nits Guthrie's photograph was in this frame and on t lat table just before the hop began when I was up here, and where is it now."
